

IRIS ARLETTE SUAZO KUNHARDT
Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources
Dominican Republic

Iris Suazo is a climate change and environmental management specialist. She works as an adjunct professor of the ecology and environmental management department at PUCMM University in the Dominican Republic and as a specialist for the GHG Monitoring department and the National GHG Inventory System of the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources of the Dominican Republic. She is a graduate of Hunter College where she received a BA in Environmental Management and Policies. Iris also has Master's degree in Environmental Management and Audit with specializations in environmental education and in application of renewable energy. Her teaching and areas of expertise include mitigation and adaptation to climate change, natural resources management and environmental policies.