Julian Báez

Julian Báez is Meteorologist from Costa Rica University, Costa Rica and Master in Science (Thesis pending) in Renewal Energy from Polytechnic University of Cataluña, Spain, National University of Asuncion and Catholic University of Asuncion, Paraguay. His professional interest is related with climate variability and change and its application, especially in Hydrology. He works as professor of Meteorology and Climatology as well as Superficial and Underground Hydrology in Catholic University of Asuncion, Paraguay, where leads some researches projects in application of severe weather detection to establish an early warning system. He is collaborator of Dr. Clyde Fraisse on the project of Risk Reduction in agriculture associated with climate variability and change. Mr. Báez is director of Paraguayan National Weather Service and Permanent Representative of Paraguay to World Meteorological Organization.