

TATIANA DE SOUZA

Conservation International (CI-Brazil)

Brazil

Bachelor in Biological and Environmental Sciences, MBA in Project Management by the Getúlio Vargas Foundation and Master's student in Sustainable Development Practices at UFRRJ/Columbia University, with a dissertation project on the socioeconomic impacts of oil palm oil expansion in the Amazon in an interdisciplinary research project on the expansion of bioenergy across the Americas. Experience in environmental education and the development and management of social and environmental projects. Is currently a Development Manager at Conservation International (CI-Brazil), responsible for the strategic alignment of project proposals developed by the organization, fundraising, partnerships relation management and with technical / academic agenda with palm expansion-related projects in the Amazon.