

Renzo Taddei

Renzo Taddei, Assistant professor of Anthropology and Communication at the School of Communication, Federal University of Rio de Janeiro (UFRJ), Brazil.

Dr. Taddei conducts research on the communication between climate scientists and meteorological institutions and local populations in Latin America. He is interested in how local populations understand and relate to the environment, and how economic development and modernization affect perceptions and behaviors associated to climate and weather.

Dr. Taddei received his Ph.D. in Anthropology from Columbia University in spring 2005. He is an assistant professor at the School of Communication, Federal University of Rio de Janeiro (UFRJ), Brazil. He is also one of the Principal Investigators of the Center for Research on Environmental Decisions (CRED, Columbia University), an affiliated researcher at the Comitas Institute for Anthropological Study (CIFAS), and collaborates in many different research efforts at the International Research Institute for Climate and Society (IRI).

Prior to joining UFRJ, he was a visiting professor at Yale, and taught also at Columbia, the City University of New York, and the State University of Campinas (UNICAMP), Brazil, and conducted anthropological research at the Research Institute for the Study of Man, in New York. He has carried out ethnographic fieldwork in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and in the state of Ceará, Northeast Brazil.